Prior to Removal to Indian Territory in 1837, Chickasaws resided in their Homeland, consisting of parts of present-day Mississippi, Alabama, Kentucky and Tennessee. Throughout the Southeast, Chickasaws and other Southeastern Indians relied heavily on the Natchez Trace, ancient trails carved out by prehistoric animals, for transportation routes and hunting grounds. Additionally, the trace provided Chickasaws hunting opportunities for deer, elk, bear, bison, rabbit and other small animals for both food and trade resources. The trace presented the opportunity for Chickasaws to communicate and trade with neighboring tribes, including the Choctaw, Natchez, Cherokee, Muscogee (Creek) and other Southeastern Indians.

Similarly to the Natchez Trace, the rivers throughout the Southeast provided Chickasaws additional avenues to communicate and trade. The Mississippi, Tennessee and Tombigbee rivers were sites for trade fairs to obtain valuable trade goods and supplies, similarly to a modern-day flea market or garage sale. During trade fairs, families could trade items for desired goods, such as conch shells, copper, obsidian and turquoise, in addition to deer skin, pottery, bear grease and bows and arrows. Items were used for adornment and survival. These trade fairs were highly organized events that brought many tribes together.

During the late 1600s, the trails and rivers served as the early "highways" that brought the Spanish, British and French nations into Chickasaw territory. Chickasaw leaders took notice of the trade items possessed by the European nations, and they sought to provide their people with the items. As the European nations began creeping into Chickasaw territory, Chickasaws extended their trade fairs to the Europeans to acquire their goods, including guns and artillery, beads, cloth and iron cookware, among many others. These trade fairs reinforced Chickasaws as early entrepreneurial leaders and as warriors who continued to regulate trade with both Southeastern nations and European nations.

Beginning in the early 1700s, Chickasaw leaders took notice of the trade items possessed by the British and agreed to a trade alliance. The British were more diplomatic with Chickasaw leaders and possessed finer trade items, as opposed to the Spanish and French. The strong negotiating and leadership skills possessed by Chickasaw leaders strengthened the Chickasaw Nation as a diplomatic nation and as a revered trading nation that stretched as far north as the Great Lakes and as far south as the Gulf of Mexico. They continued to trade with the British until the 1780s when Chickasaw leader Piominko signed the Treaty of Hopewell with the young United States in 1786 (see Piominko, Payamataha and Tishominko curriculum). This treaty marked the official alliance between the Chickasaw Nation and the United States, which greatly influenced the role the Chickasaw Nation played in the War of 1812 (see The War of 1812 curriculum). With assistance from the Chickasaw Nation, the United States was victorious over the British.

In 1803, President Thomas Jefferson commissioned William Clark and Meriwether Lewis (Lewis and Clark expedition) to map and explore the newly acquired Louisiana Purchase. President Jefferson sent Captain

Pacific Ocean. The explorers, trekked hoping to uncover new opportunities the Americans desperately wanted (Bredenberg, 2000). This large-scale land purchase included present-day Arkansas, Colorado, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota and Wyoming (The Louisiana Purchase, 2013). President Jefferson hoped the expedition crew would be able to find the elusive Northwest Passage, a water route across the country, which it was believed, could greatly assist the U.S. economy (Bredenberg, 2000).

Additionally, the land was speculated by many to have new animals and contain large amounts of fertile soil and other natural resources. The news of the purchase and opportunities rapidly spread throughout the East Coast, and many Americans began traveling west to seek out the new possibilities. Traveling west, though, was no easy task. While the Southeast was home to beautiful mountains, prairie bluffs and ridges, it was also home to dense vegetation, thorny thickets and overgrowth. If an inexperienced traveler were to venture off the trails or travel alone, it could ultimately mean death.

As more and more travelers began to advance into the Southeast seeking new opportunities, many found themselves lost, hungry and afraid due to the demanding environment. Taking advantage of the situation, Chickasaw families residing along the Southeast's trails began to establish “stands,” or wayside inns, that served as early “bed and breakfasts” for weary travelers.

Each stand was a Chickasaw family's home, and they were located along the Natchez Trace, approximately one every 5 to 6 miles. The stands served as blossoming businesses for many Chickasaw families, providing a warm meal and shelter to the explorers in exchange for money and supplies. Additional provisions for the explorers were available for purchase or trade, including corn, meat and fresh water.

American explorers and the military also found themselves at the mercy of the Chickasaw people when it came to crossing the major rivers. Many Chickasaw families who operated stands also operated ferries and provided assistance crossing the large bodies of water. Colbert's Ferry, located along the Natchez Trace, was a ferry operated by George Colbert and his family from 1800 to 1819. It is documented that he once charged Andrew Jackson $75,000 to ferry his Tennessee Army across the Tennessee River.

These early entrepreneurial examples showcase the Chickasaws' willingness to provide for their own. The Colbert family was one of many Chickasaw families during the 1800s who utilized their businesses to improve the economic well-being and quality of life for their families.

However, after the passage of the Indian Removal Act in 1830, Chickasaws were forced to abandon their businesses and remove west. While Chickasaws were removed from their Homeland, leaving behind the tangible structures resonating Chickasaw economic development in the Southeast, they did not leave behind their skills and identity as early entrepreneurs.

Majority of Chickasaws were removed from their Homeland from 1837-51. However, Chickasaw families continued to arrive in Indian Territory up to the 1890s as evidenced through Chickasaw tribal enrollment in the Dawes Rolls. Once settled in Indian Territory, Chickasaws worked diligently to rebuild. In less than 19 years, they reestablished their businesses, homes, schools, farms, families and government in their new territory (see Indian Territory Government curriculum). Chickasaw families regained their footing as successful businessmen and entrepreneurs in the following areas: merchandising, ranching, sand and rock quarrying and farming. From Oklahoma Statehood in 1907 and into the 1970s, Chickasaws remained determined to improve the lives of their own through continued and new business endeavors.

In September 1972, the Chickasaw Nation purchased the Artesian Motor Hotel, located in Sulphur, Oklahoma (Lance, 2012). While many Chickasaw families owned businesses prior to this, the motor hotel was the tribe's first owned and operated business as a whole. Forward-thinking Chickasaw leaders, including former Governor Overton James and current Chickasaw Nation Governor Bill Anoatubby, utilized Bureau of Indian Affairs' grants to renovate and remodel the facility. With a new business plan, the Artesian Motor Hotel quickly became a profit-making venture for the Chickasaw Nation, earning approximately $100,000 in its first year of operation (Lance, 2012).

Shortly thereafter, the tribe renamed the motor hotel the Chickasaw Motor Inn, and it served as the tribal headquarters until the official Chickasaw Nation headquarters building in Ada opened in 1977 (Lance, 2012). In 2006, the former motor inn was demolished to make way for the Artesian Hotel Casino & Spa, which opened its doors in 2013. The new hotel provides comfort and amenities to satisfy every need of the modern traveler. Similar to the “stands” in the Chickasaw Homeland, the Chickasaw Motor Inn attracted individuals to the area, serving as a meeting space and place to dine. Today, the Artesian Hotel Casino & Spa continues to carry on the legacy of the Chickasaw Motor Inn and the importance it had to the hospitality of Chickasaw people.

The Chickasaw Nation continues to provide for its citizens in all areas of life, including health care, nutrition, education, arts, culture and more. With more than 100 businesses, the tribe is economically strong, culturally vibrant and full of energetic people still dedicated to improving the lives of Chickasaws. The WinStar World Casino and Resort, the world’s largest casino, is owned and operated by the tribe and has made a tremendous impact on the Chickasaw people and the state of Oklahoma. Opened in 2004, the casino now provides thousands of jobs for Chickasaws and non-Chickasaw citizens.

The tribe continues to expand its businesses to include retail, gaming, professional services, manufacturing, tourism and energy (Mize 2012).

Continuing the legacy of helping others, the

more than just its citizens, but also the state of Oklahoma. Bill Lance, secretary of the Chickasaw Nation Department of Commerce, stated, “We [the Chickasaw Nation]

consider the state of Oklahoma a partner, and we share a common goal to strengthen the economy and produce as many jobs as we can.” The Chickasaw Nation remains committed to its citizens and partnerships. In 1987 when Bill Anoatubby was first elected Governor of the Chickasaw Nation, the tribe had 250 employees. Today, the tribe employs nearly 14,000 people, both Chickasaw and non-Chickasaw.

The current businesses owned and operated by the Chickasaw Nation continue to tell the story of the Chickasaw Nation providing for its citizens. Secretary Bill Lance indicated, “Our [the Chickasaw Nation] economic activities are part of the economic fabric of the state, and the revenues generated through our various business enterprises allow us to invest in programs and services for the benefit of the Chickasaw Nation and Oklahoma citizens” (Mize 2012). From early trading with Southeastern Indians and later
